

I look forward to finding my way to being a strong leader. I am looking to find my voice and to learn from other women's experiences around the globe. I wish to reinforce my capacities for working with people and acquire the knowledge that can advance my work.

Angelina Jara Garcia

Community Psychologist, Health Educator

EPES Foundation (Popular Education For Health), Chile

Through courses, workshops, consulting, schools, and supporting community organizations, my work is contributing to strengthening women's organizations and the mobilization of communities for the right to health in their own territories. I offer spaces of learning, reflecting and participating with their local community.

EPES prioritizes women's participation and leadership in women's health. It focuses primarily on their training needs, support for advocacy, promotion and mobilization in order to enforce women's rights: sexual and reproductive health, a life without violence, and in issues of tobacco control and food safety, among others. The organization establishes working relations with women from popular sectors, community organizations and public services.
